KEY HEADLINES WE REALLY CARE ABOUT

- PUTIN: TECHNOLOGIES CAN LEAD TO GLOBAL DESTRUCTION (It just sounds scary because it is coming from a Russian creep.)
- U.S. 10-year Treasury yield hits its highest level since 2002. The benchmark yield briefly reached 5.34% this morning as the global bond rout intensified. France's 10-year approached 5% and Britain's 30-year crossed 6%, its highest since 1998. Persistent inflation, heavy government borrowing and unexpectedly resilient growth are all contributing. ("Higher for longer" has apparently been replaced by "higher until morale improves.")
- Anthropic could borrow as much as $42 billion from Broadcom. Broadcom has agreed to potentially lend Anthropic up to $42 billion to help finance leases of Broadcom AI chips, according to Anthropic's IPO filing. It's another example of increasingly elaborate financing arrangements supporting the AI infrastructure boom. (We've reached the phase of the AI boom where the chip company may lend you the money to rent the chips from the chip company. Nothing circular-looking here.)
- Chinese hackers reportedly impersonated a former U.S. official to target AI experts. Cybersecurity firm Proofpoint says hackers linked to China posed as a former senior American official and targeted fewer than 10 AI specialists in an attempt to steal email credentials. The operation appears focused on people with access to sensitive AI information. (Apparently stealing AI secrets now begins the same way as every bad office scam: Hi, it's me, important person you definitely know.)
